Michael Webb is a real estate lawyer representing clients in a broad array of commercial transactions, including acquisitions, dispositions, 1031 exchanges, financings, economic development, and contract and lease negotiations.

In his real estate finance transactional practice, Michael represents lenders and borrowers in financings and commercial transactions using real estate as collateral, and counsels commercial banks, non-bank financing companies, and other financial groups entering into financing arrangements. Michael handles mergers and acquisitions, private equity and joint ventures, and taxable and tax-exempt financing arrangements, advising banks, corporate borrowers, business and property owners, not-for-profit organizations, and general corporate clients in both straightforward and complex property transactions.

In his economic development practice, Michael works with business owners, real estate developers, and other clients to obtain economic and tax incentives from local industrial development agencies and economic development corporations.

Michael's practice encompasses all stages of the deal cycle - including structuring, negotiating, and documenting commercial real estate and finance transactions, as well as diligence review of commercial leases, commercial real estate titles, and surveys.

Prior to joining Farrell Fritz, Michael practiced real estate law in the Long Island regional offices of an AmLaw 100 law firm.
